

Why We Focus on Leadership

We are all Leaders in various forms or ways in our personal lives.

Are you ready to become the Leader in the Workplace?

Our Leadership training is designed to assist individuals that are ready to transition from their employee role to a first-time and/or entry-level supervisory role. Whether this transition occurs through a promotion or a new job assignment, you must know how to be that new team leader and/or that new Supervisor/Manager. Workplace Leaders are not born, they are made by way of formal training and grooming.

A Leader is someone that motivates their team, leads by example, creates innovation for their unit/team, and strives to work smarter - not harder. A Leader will defend their employees. A Leader walks the talk - an encourager of motivation and progression. Leaders mentor their team for upward mobility and/or advancement. A Leader ensures that during the absence of a team member the job is still to flow and be completed as scheduled; no one is indispensable in the workplace. A Leader encourages cross-training for quality assurance. A Leader inspires team members to greatness. A Leader sees all the shades and hues of the color wheel. A Leader keeps that big picture mentality and knows to think outside of the box. A Leader maintains focus. A Leader is an active listener. A Leader will see themselves as service-focused and as part of the team. A Leader will build workflow strategies that create efficiency. A Leader readily accepts accountability as part of the team, works with their team for solutions, and encourages others through their positive example of teamwork.

Contact Partners In Progress to determine which courses can assist you with your new leadership role.

